INFECTIONS, SURGICAL CONDITIONS & TRAUMA IN PREGNANCY

Dear friends,

Perinatal Infections is one of the major cause of maternal morbidity and mortality after haemorrhage and hypertensive disorders.

Treating consultant has to decide about rational use of antibiotics such that the antibiotics are suitable for the mother and effective against infection without causing any harmful effect on the foetus.

During pregnancy technique of anaesthesia and surgical approach towards particular surgery is also different.

Postoperative complications and their solution is tricky subject and sometimes solution is really simple.

Secondly with changing attitude of modern active women towards pregnancy, there is increased risk of trauma in pregnancy.

The chances of injury are marginally increased in pregnant women due to increased abdominal size and resultant change in centre of gravity, laxity of ligaments due to pregnancy hormones, and unstable gait. Pattern of injury is different and incidence of abdominal trauma is higher as compared to non pregnant women.

Due to change in anatomy and altered physiology, management of these women is different and difficult. Sometimes we have to take decisions with utmost precision to save mother and if possible the baby.

We as Team NMOGS have decided to conduct our Annual Conference along with a dedicated workshop on these important topics which often leave us stumped.

This year's UPDATES 2023 has expert speakers who will share their experiences in dealing with PERINATAL INFECTIONS, SURGICAL CONDITIONS AND TRAUMA in pregnancy.

Looking forward to see you all !!
